LOCATION.

Judson College is located in Hendersonville, on the Asheville & Spartanburg Railroad, and can be reached via Asheville or Spartanburg.

Of Hendersonville a facinating writer has said:

"From the valley of the Upper French Broad, a plateau rises, by gentle gradations, to where the Blue Ridge, abruptly swerving from its southwesterly course, shoots far away to the westward. The higher peaks suddenly disappear, and for a space of several miles, the traveler only knows that he has passed the Ridge by finding the streamlets flowing in the opposite direction. On either hand, giant mountain buttresses guard this lovely table-land. It is diversified by here and there a wandering ridge or isolated peak, offshoots of the surrounding mountains, while far to the westward the mighty Balsam and the conical peak of Pisgah, melting in ever-varying hues against the evening sky, teem with a wealth of such glorious sunset effects as few landscapes on earth can afford.

"In the midst of this magnificent panorama, like a topaz in emerald setting, lies Hendersonville. It is the pearl of mountain towns. Its deep foundations are not laid in fathomless red-clay mud; its soil is a natural filter of gravel and micaceous sand, and in an hour or two after a shower, slippered ladies walk its broad, aspen-shaded streets in comfort.

"And in the bosom of that granitic soil, what wells of limpid coolness! If water can be purer than this, it is certainly the less delicious for its purity. Ice can be had, but after a glass of ice-water you go to the well for a drink.

"And what breezes here do blow! Not a particle of miasma, but heaven's own elixir of life, up here 2,252 feet above the sea.

"And what nights for sleep! You always need a blanket or two in midsummer."
